The picture given the place of honor apon the north wall, for instance, is considered by Dr. Ferguson to be among the greatest in the collection, and yet even the average Western artist will consider it difficult. The general public will, it is to be feared, pass it utterly for some years to come. Yet in the light of Dr. Ferguson's comment upon it it becomes highly interesting and illuminative of the Chinese point of view. It is he accordingly interesting and illuminative of the Chinese point of view. It is by a rare artist, the great L4 Chieng, and it is called "Winter Scene." Yet there is no heaped snow in it nor ice nor the obvious aciter view. There is merely a cluster of affess trees in the foreground, trees that opear to flive been scarred and buffeted shrunken by cruel winds, and upon the topmost boughs magples are alight-ing. There is an air of loneliness, bleak-ness, forlorness that suggests winter, but there is no literalness.

It is highly typical of the frivolous Tang age in China, and in it two princes are returning home from a party on horseback, but, alas, sadly drunk. The servants converse about their masters, as servants always will, but the two princes are totally oblivious. Indeed the first one is in an entirely collapsed state and has to be held upon his animal by his servants. The horses, the men, the pines

MORGAN UNDECIDED AS TO ART DISPOSAL

Metropolitan Museum Will Not Get $50,000,000 Collection, It Is Believed.

Treasures Will Be Open to Public on February 18, Says Director Robinson.

J. Pierpont Morgan is genuinely unde cided as to the disposition he will ultimately make of the $50,000,000 art collections of his father, now in the hands of the Metropolitan Museum of Art of this city. He declined yesterday to add to what he said recently.

"There is nothing sold or to be sold now," he then said. "I am going to get advice as to the placing of the various collections and I have no statement to make at the present time.

"There may be some things that I will eventually dispose of, but there is nothing to be done now. When I make up my mind just what to do I will go ahead and do it. Of course the art dealers are mind just what to do I will go ahead and do it. Of course the art dealers are anxious to get hold of a lot of things."

When Mr. Morgan was seen yesterday he pointed to the utterance above and declared smillingly:

"That is the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. I cannot supplement it in any way at this time."

"This statement has been taken to confirm the report that you will eventually sell or break up the collections, especially your concluding words about the art deal-

"The art dealers are certainly eager to get hold of some of the things," Mr. Morgan replied.

Friends of Mr. Morgan laid emphasis on one point: this city has not now, and never has had, any sound reason to believe that the Morgan art treasures would become the permanent possession of the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

On behalf of Robert W. de Forest, president of the trustees of the museum, it was said yesterday that the museum had received no intimation from Mr. Morgan as to his intentions in regard to the art collections there since the exchange of letters last May 27 and 28. At that time Mr. Morgan wrote a letter to the trustees in which he said in part:

"It is my desire that the objects of art left by my father should be exhibited for the benefit of the public as soon as may be. I understand " that it is quite possible to arrange in the new northeast wing a temporary installation of the objects which would be, while not of a final character, of great advantage to the people of New York, since it would enable them to see the things and get the benefit of them pending such final disposition as may be made of the objects under Mr. Morgan's will."
